Introduction

This is a step by step process....Follow the steps here in the order that they are laid out and most of all....use your sense to answer his/her questions if the answer is not here....

The person can ask any type of question that this pdf is too short to cover every question in the world so answer with your sense....

Here are the steps

- Introduction
- Explain why you chatted him or her
- Tell him more about yourself and ask about him or her too
- Find out if he or she has money before 👇
- You Build trust/Fall in love
- Bill the person/Use the profit claim update on him or her

STEP 1: INTRODUCTION

- Hi Your profile hits home with me and I like that you seem relaxed and very open. Life is to enjoy, laugh, communicate and have a connection with someone special who has a zest for life and all things in it. I like to be active and I tend to find the humor in life. It's my feeling that people need adventure, laughter and passion....Let's talk and see where life takes us..

- hello how are you doing...I'm new her and i will like to make new friends here and more over i love making new friends too....

- Hello....How are you doing?I do Came Across your profile and Its very Lovely and Awesome...

- Hey...How are you doing today? You look good...where are you from?

- (If the person has tattoos)Hey dear,you have nice tattoos on your body...and you look good as well😉

- Hello ..You have very nice pictures on your profile.....How do you look so good?😁

- (If the person dresses well)Hey dear...I love the way you dress 😉

- (If the person smiles in his pictures)Hey dear...you actually have a cute smile

- (If the person post his children)You have very cute children or child....what's his/her name?... depending on if the child na boy or girl

So depending on the type of person,you can personalize a message to him....

And if you notice...most of these messages are compliments....if you compliment them...they are more likely to reply faster because everybody likes compliments....

But if you compliment a specific thing about the person,like his dress,or cloth,or dog,or Child...it works even better

If you can't find something specific to compliment

Then just use the first 4 options...

Note: Like 2 or 3 of the person's posts so your message can pop up in his notifications...but don't go and like 10 of his pictures so em no go see you as robot....

Just 2 or 3 is okay

STEP 2 :EXPLAIN WHY YOU TEXTED THEM

.... They will likely ask you why you sent them a dm or why you chatted them....

Some stupid people will start billing them immediately and asking for money or one thing or the other...But think about it...

Someone that doesn't know you,someone that hasn't even seen you before ...

You just chatted the person and you started billing immediately...do you think that person will pay?

So STEP 2....Act friendly like you are interested in them

- I just saw your profile and you look good and I decided to make friends with you....

- (if the person has kids)I just saw your profile and your kids look so cute and I would love to know their names...

- (If the person has tattoos)I just saw your tattoos and they look good...I would love to get one...Where and when did you get them?

- (If the person has dogs) I just tosaw your profile and your dog looks cute...I would love to get one like him/her...What's his/her name?

- (if the person dresses well)I just came across your profile and I love your dress sense....I have a horrible taste in fashion...maybe you could give me one or two tips about dressing well and looking good 😊

- (If the person is a photographer)You have very beautiful pictures on your profiles....how long have you been a photographer for?

- (If the person doesn't have anything in his profile that you can talk about) I just saw your profile and I wanted to make friends with you...I hope you don't mind 😊

You should have noticed a pattern here....when it comes to connecting with people...you can't be lazy

You have to actively find something on the person's profile that you can comment on and from there you can start chatting and being friends....But if you can't find anything you can start a conversation with on the person's profile....use the last option

But that last option should be only used...I repeat...Only used when you can't find anything on the person's profile to connect to...

And also,for example if the person is a football fan,you can ask something about football and use your brain to talk about stuff I didn't mention here that you see on the person's profile

STEP 3 :GET TO KNOW EACH OTHER

So let's say that you saw on his profile that he has a dog and you talked about his dog for a while then you can switch the conversation and say that it's nice to meet him or her and start asking personal questions like where are you from,what's your job and stuff like that...

Here are a list of over 300 questions that you can ask him/her to get to know him/her and I have included ur own part of the answer so that if client asks you about your own...you will already have something to just copy and paste to the client and keep d conversation going

It took me over 3 weeks to write this format so use it well...

Let's begin:

- LIKES

1. What's your favorite way to spend a day off?

On a perfect day off, I like to sleep in just a little, then ease into the morning with some good music and coffee. I love chilling at home with movies or gaming, and if the weather's nice, a long walk clears my head. It's about unplugging and doing things that don’t feel like obligations.

2. What type of music are you into?

I’m into a mix — from chill R&B and afrobeat to rap and a bit of pop. It really depends on my mood. Music is how I shift gears during the day — something smooth when I’m relaxing, something upbeat when I need energy.

3. What was the best vacation you ever took and why?

Probably the time I went to a beach resort. I was completely unplugged — no emails, no stress, just waves, sun, good food, and even better company. It reminded me how good it feels to be present.

4. Where’s the next place on your travel bucket list and why?

Tokyo. I’ve always been fascinated by the culture, the mix of tradition and futuristic vibes, and I want to eat my way through every ramen spot and tech store there.

5. What are your hobbies, and how did you get into them?

I’m big on gaming and watching 4K movies. I think it started when I got my first console — the storytelling, the visuals, it all pulled me in. Now it’s my way of escaping and getting inspired.

6. What was your favorite age growing up?

Probably 16. That age where you’re just starting to feel like an adult, but you’re still carefree and life feels wide open. Everything was intense — friendships, dreams, even music.

7. What was the last thing you read?

A few articles about mental strength and personal growth. I like things that help me understand people better — and myself too. I'm always trying to level up, not just at work but in how I think.

8. Would you say you're more of an extrovert or an introvert?

I'm an ambivert — I enjoy social energy when I'm in the mood, but I definitely need my alone time to recharge. Crowds are cool, but deep convos one-on-one? That's my zone.

10. What was the last TV show you binge-watched?

The Last of Us. I got hooked from the first episode. The story, the characters, and that post-apocalyptic vibe — I was all in. It’s one of those shows that stays with you.

11. Are you into podcasts or do you only listen to music?

I’ve started getting into podcasts more lately. Especially ones on relationships, success, and how people think. It’s a nice way to learn while doing everyday things.

12. Do you have a favorite holiday? Why or why not?

Honestly, New Year’s. I love the feeling of a reset — new goals, new energy. Plus, it’s all about good food, reflecting, and setting the vibe for what’s next.

13. If you could only eat one food for the rest of your life, what would it be?

Tough one, but I’d say pasta. There are so many ways to make it, and it always feels like comfort food no matter the mood.

14. Do you like going to the movies or prefer watching at home?

I like both, but there’s something about watching at home — dimmed lights, surround sound, blankets, snacks. It’s more personal and I can pause when I need a break.

15. What’s your go-to guilty pleasure?

Late-night snacks and watching old music videos or TikToks until I realize it’s 2 a.m. and I’ve gone down a rabbit hole.

16. How old were you when you had your first celebrity crush, and who was it?

Maybe around 10 or 11 — it was Beyoncé. She had this glow, confidence, and voice that made my little heart skip.

17. What's one thing that can instantly make your day better?

A voice note or text from someone I care about — especially if it's random or sweet. That little bit of connection can shift everything.

18. Do you have any pet peeves?

Yes — people who chew loudly or interrupt constantly. I value being present and respectful in conversation, so when that’s missing, it stands out.

19. Which meal is your favorite: breakfast, lunch, or dinner?

Dinner. It’s when I’m most relaxed, and it feels like a reward after a long day. Plus, I like to take my time with it.

20. What song always gets you out on the dance floor?

Anything upbeat and afrobeat. Give me something by Burna Boy or Davido, and I’m moving — even if it’s just a little groove.

21. What activity instantly calms you?

Playing games, watching a movie in 4K, or just going for a walk with some good music. It gives me time to think or not think at all.

22. Ideally, how would you spend your birthday?

With people I love, great food, maybe a mini trip or staycation. Just laughing, vibing, and feeling appreciated without too much fuss.

23. What do you do on your commute to/from work?

I usually listen to music or a podcast. It helps me either gear up for the day or wind down depending on the direction.

24. What’s your favorite season and why?

I like the rainy season when it’s calm and cool — perfect for staying in, getting cozy, and just reflecting or enjoying indoor vibes.

25. What’s the phone app you use most?

Probably YouTube. I use it for everything — learning, entertainment, news, even background noise while I do stuff.

26. Would you rather cook or order in?

Ordering in wins most days, but I don't mind cooking when I'm in the mood. There's something therapeutic about it when there's no rush.

27. What's your favorite board game?

Monopoly — it brings out the competitive side and sparks the best (and worst) convos. It's fun and frustrating in the best way.

28. How do you take your coffee?

Strong, with a splash of milk — nothing too fancy. Just enough to get the engine running in the morning.

29. What’s your most prized possession and why?

My gaming console and sound setup. It’s my escape zone and how I wind down. It’s more than just stuff — it’s where I decompress and get inspired.

30. What would be the first thing you’d do if you won the lottery?

Take care of my family. Then I’d invest in some passion projects and probably take a long break to just enjoy life fully for a bit.

31. How do you enjoy spending your alone time?

Gaming, watching movies, or just thinking — I enjoy silence sometimes. It's when I recharge and reset my thoughts.

32. What's the best concert you've ever been to?

I haven't been to many, but I imagine a live Burna Boy or Travis Scott show would top the list. Energy, crowd, vibes — all unmatched.

33. Do you have a favorite type of exercise?

I like walking long distances with music or doing simple bodyweight exercises. Nothing too heavy, just enough to feel active and clear-headed.

34. What causes are you passionate about?

Mental health, especially for men. I think it’s important to talk, open up, and not feel like you have to always be the strong silent type.

35. What’s your favorite content genre (horror, sci-fi, rom-com, etc.)?

Sci-fi and post-apocalyptic stories — I like anything that explores survival, future worlds, and the strength of human connection.

36. What’s an essential part of your daily routine?

Quiet time. Whether it’s during a walk, in the shower, or lying in bed — I need that moment to just breathe and check in with myself.

37. What’s the worst gift you’ve ever received, and what did you do about it?

A shirt that didn’t fit at all and wasn’t my style. I said thank you, smiled, and quietly gave it away later.

38. Who or what never fails to make you laugh?

My dog. Chihuahuas are tiny comedians. Also, dumb memes — the kind that are so stupid, they’re hilarious.

39. Do you like group activities, or prefer doing things solo?

Depends on my mood. I love a good group vibe when there’s connection, but solo time is peaceful and predictable.

40. What’s your ideal first date?

Something chill where we can actually talk — maybe a cozy dinner or a fun activity like bowling or arcade games. Nothing too formal.

41. What would your perfect day look like?

Good weather, great company, no pressure — maybe a mix of fun and relaxation. Something that flows naturally without too much planning.

42. Do you collect anything?

I wouldn’t say I collect seriously, but I do keep certain movie memorabilia or gaming-related items that remind me of moments.

43. What’s the best gift you’ve ever received, and why?

A personalized surprise — it wasn’t the most expensive, but it showed someone really paid attention to what I liked. That meant a lot.

44. What would your perfect meal look like?

A mix of everything I love — spicy, creamy, flavorful. Something that feels like a hug from the inside out.

45. What's your favorite podcast?

Right now, it's a mix between "On Purpose with Jay Shetty" and relationship-based podcasts. I like deep dives on love, growth, and mindset.

- LIKES

46. What's your favorite podcast?

I'm more of a visual person, so I don't binge podcasts often, but when I do, I like something that’s both inspiring and easy to digest. I’d say my favorite is probably The Diary of a CEO by Steven Bartlett. I love how it balances personal growth, business wisdom, and raw emotion—it’s like you’re eavesdropping on deep, real conversations with people who’ve figured something out about life.

47. What’s the first thing you do after getting home from work?

The moment I step through the door, it’s all about unwinding. I kick off my shoes, check on my dog, and either lie back to stream something or play a quick round of a game. It’s that reset I need to transition out of “work mode” and just be myself again.

48. Who or what inspires you in your career?

I’m inspired by people who create something from nothing—entrepreneurs, artists, even athletes who rise up despite the odds. That kind of drive and vision pushes me to stay focused, especially on tough days. I also keep a few personal mentors in mind whose advice still guides my choices.

49. How do you approach taking time off from work?

I used to struggle with this, feeling guilty whenever I needed a break. But now I plan it intentionally. I block off days just to recharge, without needing a reason. It's all about mental maintenance—if I'm burnt out, I can't show up as my best self.

50. What's something an outsider wouldn't know about your industry?

Most people think the shipping and logistics business is just about moving goods from A to B, but it's way more complex. Timing, weather, global politics, even one missed form can delay a shipment. It’s a lot of pressure, but when things run smoothly, it’s incredibly rewarding.

51. Do you have a morning routine at work? If so, what it’s like?

Yeah, I like to start early. I check emails, prioritize the top three tasks for the day, and take 15 minutes just to think—no distractions. It helps me set the tone for the day instead of jumping into chaos.

52. Are you able to work from home, and if so, do you enjoy it?

Sometimes, yes. I enjoy the flexibility, but I also need the structure and energy of being around people. I try to split my time so I get the best of both worlds.

53. Do you get along with all your coworkers?

Mostly, yes. I've learned to find common ground even with people I don't click with naturally. Mutual respect is a big thing for me. We don't need to be best friends, but we should be able to work as a team.

54. What's your favorite thing about your current job?

The freedom to make big decisions. I like being in a role where my ideas can directly influence outcomes. There's a sense of ownership that motivates me to always bring my A-game.

55. What annoys you the most about your job?

Honestly, the unpredictability. Shipments get delayed, clients change their minds, and sometimes it feels like everything's on fire. But I guess that chaos is also what makes it interesting.

56. What’s the career highlight you’re most proud of?

Launching my own company and seeing it survive the early, messy stages. There’s something unforgettable about watching your first few deals go through—it’s a mix of relief, pride, and excitement.

57. What type of role do you want to take on after this one?

Something even more strategic. Maybe mentoring younger entrepreneurs or building systems that improve the entire industry. I want to make an impact, not just profit.

58. Are you more of a “work to live” or a “live to work” type of person?

I used to lean more toward “live to work,” but now I’m finding balance. I want to be successful, but not at the cost of relationships, peace of mind, or health.

59. Does your job make you feel happy and fulfilled? Why or why not?

It does when I’m in flow—solving problems, closing deals, leading my team. But there are times when the stress can cloud that feeling. I’ve learned that fulfillment is something you have to protect intentionally.

60. How would your 10-year-old self react to what you do now?

He’d probably be impressed—and a little confused. I think he’d be proud of how independent and resourceful I’ve become, even if he’d still rather be a superhero.

61. What do you remember most about your first job?

The nerves. I remember how seriously I took it, even though it wasn't glamorous. I learned how to be accountable and show up—even when I didn't feel like it.

62. How old were you when you started working?

I was about 16. Started with some small jobs here and there, but it taught me the value of money early on. That grind stuck with me.

63. What's the worst job you've ever had?

I worked a short stint doing phone surveys. I hated bothering people, and it felt like I was just reading a script. It taught me a lot about patience—and how important passion is.

64. What originally got you interested in your current field of work?

I liked the idea of connecting people, places, and products. There’s something powerful about being the bridge that makes everything else possible. Logistics is invisible—but essential.

65. Have you ever had a side hustle or considered having one?

Yeah, a few actually. Some worked, others didn't. But I think it's smart to explore multiple income streams, especially when you have skills or passions outside your main job.

66. What's the best career decision you've ever made?

Taking the leap to start my own business. It was scary, but the freedom and growth that came with it made everything worth it.

67. What's the worst career decision you've ever made?

Staying too long in a situation where I was undervalued. I kept hoping things would change instead of realizing I deserved better.

68. Do you consider yourself good at networking?

I'd say I'm more intentional than naturally social. I like building real relationships, not just swapping business cards. Quality over quantity for me.

69. What career advice would you give to your younger self?

Don’t wait for permission. Start earlier, take more risks, and don’t be afraid to ask for help. Most people don’t have it all figured out either.

70. Do you believe in having a “five-year plan”?

Yes, but I also believe in being flexible. Life throws curveballs, so having a vision is great—as long as you’re not rigid with the path.

- CAREER (Continued)

71. Have you ever taken a big risk in your career?

Yeah, starting my own business was probably the biggest risk I've ever taken. No steady income, no backup plan—just belief in what I was building. It was terrifying, but also the most rewarding leap I've ever made.

72. How do you handle criticism at work?

I've gotten better at this over the years. I used to take criticism personally, but now I try to listen first, process it, and look for the useful part—even if it stings at first.

73. What would your dream job look like if money weren't a factor?

If money wasn't an issue, I'd probably build a mentorship platform or maybe run retreats for creatives and entrepreneurs. Something where I'm still leading but also deeply connected to people.

74. How do you keep learning or growing professionally?

I read a lot and take online courses here and there, but honestly, I learn the most through real-life problem-solving and conversations with smart people around me.

75. What's something you've failed at, and what did you learn?

I once launched a product line that totally flopped. It was humbling. But I learned to test the waters first and not fall in love with ideas before they're proven.

76. Do you enjoy leadership or prefer working independently?

I love leading, but I also value having quiet time to work independently. I'm kind of a hybrid—I lead when it's needed, but I don't need to be in the spotlight all the time.

77. What's your biggest strength in your professional life?

My biggest strength is probably how calm I stay under pressure. Even when things are falling apart, I can usually think clearly and make solid decisions.

78. What's one thing you're actively working to improve at work?

I'm working on delegation. I tend to take on too much because I trust myself, but I’m learning that trusting others is key to real growth.

79. How do you disconnect from work on your days off?

I try to create a mini routine for myself—no emails, good food, maybe a drive or some gaming. It’s important to actually rest instead of just being “off work” while still mentally checked in.

80. Do you think work should be about passion or stability—or both?

Ideally, both. Passion keeps you going, and stability gives you peace of mind. If you’re missing one, you’ll eventually feel it.

81. How do you deal with burnout or stress from work?

When I feel burnout creeping in, I pull back hard. I’ll cancel meetings, go for a walk, sleep in—whatever I need. Rest is a form of strategy, not weakness.

82. Do you prefer a fast-paced work environment or a slower one?

I prefer fast-paced environments. I like the energy, the movement, and the constant challenge. It keeps me from getting bored.

83. Would you ever change careers completely? Why or why not?

I've been on both sides. Being mentored early on changed my mindset, and mentoring others now keeps me sharp—and grounded.

If the right thing came along, I would. I believe people evolve, and sometimes that means letting go of the old version of success.

84. Have you ever been mentored—or mentored someone else?

I've been on both sides. Being mentored early on changed my mindset, and mentoring others now keeps me sharp—and grounded.

85. What motivates you when things get tough professionally?

I remind myself why I started. The vision I have for my future self, my family, and the freedom I'm building—that's what keeps me pushing forward.

86. Do you enjoy competition in your industry or try to avoid it?

I don’t mind competition. I respect it. It makes me sharper. But I try to stay focused on my own lane rather than chasing someone else’s shadow.

87. How do you balance ambition with contentment?

That’s tricky. I set goals, but I also celebrate small wins along the way. Otherwise, you’re just in a constant race and never feeling “enough.”

88. Do you believe in luck when it comes to success?

Luck plays a role, sure. But I think preparation and consistency create the space where luck can even show up.

89. How do you handle negotiations or making big decisions?

I do my research, trust my gut, and don’t rush. Whether it’s negotiating a deal or hiring someone, I believe in taking the time to get it right.

90. Have you ever walked away from a job or client on principle?

Yes, once. The deal was financially tempting, but the client's values didn't sit right with me. Walking away felt powerful—and the right thing to do.

91. What's the most important value you bring to your work?

Integrity. If I say I'll do something, I do it. And I think people feel safe around that kind of energy—it builds trust.

92. What's your long-term career vision or legacy?

I want to build something that outlives me—whether that's a company, a philosophy, or even just a reputation for how I showed up in the world.

Next up: FAMILY (93–132)

Ready? Let's go.

- FAMILY

---

93. What kind of relationship do you have with your parents?

My relationship with my parents is solid. It's not perfect—we've had our rough patches—but there’s always been respect and love underneath it all. These days, I appreciate them more than I ever did growing up.

94. Are you closer to your mom or your dad?

I’ve always been a little closer to my mom. She’s got this calm energy, the kind where you feel safe talking about anything. That said, I’ve had some really meaningful one-on-one moments with my dad as I’ve gotten older.

95. How many siblings do you have, and what's your bond like?

I have a sibling or two, and the bond is pretty strong. We've had the usual sibling fights growing up, but there's this unspoken loyalty between us—like we'd drop anything to help each other if needed.

96. Do you come from a big family?

Yeah, I come from a pretty big family, especially on one side. Holidays feel like mini reunions, and there's always someone laughing too loud or trying to sneak the best slice of pie.

97. What’s your favorite childhood memory?

One of my favorite childhood memories is being outside all day during summer, riding bikes, playing hide and seek, then crashing on the couch with snacks and cartoons. Life felt so simple and full.

98. Was your family strict growing up?

They weren’t overly strict, but there were definitely rules—and you knew when you crossed the line. Looking back, I think that balance helped me stay grounded without feeling smothered.

99. Who in your family has influenced you the most?

My mom probably influenced me the most. Her strength, the way she handled things quietly but powerfully—it stuck with me. She taught me more through action than words.

100. Are you more like your mom or your dad in personality?

I think I'm a mix, honestly. I've got my dad's logical thinking and dry humor, but my emotional intelligence and empathy come straight from my mom.

101. What family tradition do you cherish most?

We have this tradition of cooking together during holidays—everyone in the kitchen, chopping, tasting, laughing. It's chaotic in the best way. That's when I feel most connected to my roots.

102. How do you feel about starting your own family one day?

I do want to start my own family one day. Not just for the milestone, but because I love the idea of creating a space where love, support, and fun are the everyday norm.

103. Do you see your family often?

Not as often as I'd like, especially with how busy life can get. But I try to be intentional—calling, visiting when I can, sending thoughtful messages just to stay close.

104. What's one thing your family taught you that you still live by?

They taught me that you always show up for the people you love. Whether that's with your time, words, or actions—it's about being there.

105. How did your family shape your view on love and relationships?

I saw both the beautiful and the complicated parts of love growing up. It made me want to be intentional about how I love someone—communication, respect, and not taking the other person for granted.

106. Who was your role model growing up?

My grandfather was my role model. Quiet strength, deep wisdom, and a no-nonsense kind of love. I still think about things he said to me when I'm facing big decisions.

107. What's a funny story from your family life you still laugh about?

Once, we got locked out of the house during a snowstorm because someone (not naming names!) forgot the keys. We ended up building a snow fort while we waited for help. Cold but unforgettable.

108. Do you like big family gatherings or prefer small ones?

I enjoy big gatherings, but only for a short while. I'm more into meaningful one-on-one or small group moments—conversations that go deeper than surface-level stuff.

109. What's something you hope to do differently when you have your own family?

I want to break the "keep everything bottled up" habit. I hope to create an environment where my future kids feel safe being open and vulnerable.

110. Have you ever had to support a family member through a tough time?

Yes, I've had to be there emotionally and even financially during a hard time. It reminded me that love isn't just about words—it's about showing up, especially when it's tough.

Absolutely — here's your list with each answer placed under the corresponding question:

111. Do you want kids someday?

Yeah, I do want kids. I think there's something beautiful about guiding a little human through life and learning from them as much as they learn from you.

112. What kind of parent do you think you'd be?

I think I'd be a pretty patient, curious parent. I'd want to raise emotionally intelligent kids who feel heard and respected. And I'd definitely be the "fun" parent too—games, surprises, spontaneous ice cream trips.

113. How do you handle disagreements with family?

I try to stay calm and listen first. Family can be messy because we care so deeply, but I believe in solving things without turning it into war.

114. Have you ever been the “black sheep” in the family?

There’ve definitely been moments I felt like the black sheep—when I took risks or made choices that didn’t fit the traditional path. But over time, I think they’ve come to understand me better.

115. What does “home” feel like to you?

“Home” to me isn’t a place—it’s a feeling. Safety, acceptance, the freedom to be completely myself. That’s what I want to create wherever I go.

116. Are you close with any cousins, aunts, or extended family?

Yeah, a few cousins I grew up with feel more like siblings than extended family. Even when we don’t talk for a while, we pick up like no time has passed.

117. Did you grow up feeling loved and supported?

I did. Maybe not in the most expressive or verbal ways, but I always knew they had my back—and that's huge.

118. What's your favorite holiday memory with family?

One Christmas, we had a blackout and ended up playing board games by candlelight. It was so simple, but we laughed more that night than we had in months.

119. Is there anyone in your family you wish you were closer to?

There are a couple of family members I wish I knew better, but life and distance have gotten in the way. Still, the door's always open if they ever want to reconnect.

120. What does your ideal family life look like in the future?

My ideal family life is warm, connected, full of laughter, but also open to hard conversations. I want it to be a safe place for everyone who walks through the door.

121. How do you show love to your family?

I show love through actions—remembering little things, giving my time, helping out without being asked. I'm not always super verbal, but I try to be consistent.

122. Has your family always supported your dreams?

Not always, but enough. Sometimes they were hesitant or didn't quite get my dreams, but they never actively discouraged me—which gave me the space to prove myself.

123. What kind of relationship do you want between your kids and your parents?

I'd love for my kids to have a strong bond with their grandparents—stories, traditions, that sense of generational wisdom. That kind of connection is priceless.

124. Have you ever had to set boundaries with family?

Yes, and it wasn't easy. Boundaries can feel like rejection to some people, but sometimes you need space to preserve the relationship long-term.

125. How do you keep in touch with family that's far away?

Mostly through video calls and voice notes. Even just sending a random meme or inside joke can keep that thread of connection alive.

126. What's something your family always teased you about?

I used to get teased for being the “deep” one—always asking big questions or going philosophical out of nowhere. Now it’s just part of who I am.

127. Do you think family always comes first?

I think family comes first, but not at the cost of your peace or growth. There’s a balance between loyalty and self-respect.

128. How did your family handle conflict when you were growing up?

Conflict was usually swept under the rug, to be honest. It’s made me want to approach things more openly with my own future family.

129. What does being a “good partner” mean to your family?

To them, a good partner is someone reliable, respectful, and generous—someone who’s all-in for the long haul.

130. Do you ever feel pressure from your family about your life choices?

Yeah, occasionally. There’s that unspoken pressure to follow a path they understand. But I've learned to respectfully carve my own.

131. What do your parents think of your career?

They're proud now, but it took a while for them to understand what I was doing. Once they saw the results, they became some of my biggest supporters.

132. What legacy do you want to leave for your future family?

I want to leave behind a family culture of honesty, love, laughter, and the freedom to be yourself without fear or shame.

- VALUES

"In learning about someone’s values, you are learning about their owner’s manual,”

By learning about someone’s life philosophy, you're able to get at their true essence, how they live their life, and what drives their actions,"

That said, you can't just ask, "What are your values?". What you can ask:

Great! Let’s continue with the VALUES section—questions first, followed by friendly, conversational answers. These go deeper into your personal beliefs, worldview, and the principles that guide your actions and relationships.

VALUES – Deep & Friendly Questions

133. What personal values do you live by daily?

I live by honesty, loyalty, and self-awareness. I try to be real with people, and even more importantly, real with myself. Every day I try to do what feels right—even when no one's watching.

134. How do you define integrity in your own life?

For me, integrity is about being consistent—who I am in public should match who I am in private. It's also about keeping promises, even the small ones I make to myself.

135. What's something you believe in strongly, even if others don't?

I genuinely believe that being kind is a strength, not a weakness. A lot of people see empathy as soft, but I think it takes real courage to stay compassionate in a world that's often harsh.

136. How do you handle moral gray areas or complex decisions?

I sit with them. I try not to rush decisions and instead reflect on what feels aligned with who I am and what I stand for. Sometimes it means choosing the harder path, but I'd rather sleep peacefully than cut corners.

137. Do you think people are inherently good?

I do. Life, trauma, and bad choices can cover that up, but deep down I think most people are trying their best. We just all have different tools, pain, and lessons.

138. What does loyalty mean to you in a relationship?

It’s not just about being faithful—it’s about showing up, having each other’s back, and protecting each other’s name even when they’re not in the room. Loyalty is love in action.

139. What role does honesty play in your life?

A huge one. I can handle hard truths, but I struggle with dishonesty. I think trust is the bedrock of any deep relationship—without honesty, you're just building on sand.

140. Have you ever had to choose between what's right and what's easy?

Yeah, more than once. And even though choosing the right thing was tough in the moment, it gave me long-term peace. Shortcuts come with a cost, and I've learned that the hard way.

141. What life principle have you learned the hard way?

That not everyone's intentions match their words. I've had to learn to pay attention to people's actions more than their promises.

142. What's your stance on forgiveness—how easy is it for you to forgive?

I try to forgive, not just for others but for myself. Holding onto anger feels like dragging a weight. But forgiveness doesn't always mean reconnection—sometimes it’s just a release.

143. Do you believe in second chances?

I do—especially when someone shows genuine growth. We’re all flawed. What matters to me is whether someone learns and does better after they mess up.

144. What kind of legacy do you want to leave behind?

I want people to remember me as someone who made others feel seen and safe—someone who kept it real and left a mark through connection and care.

145. What does respect look like to you?

Respect is about listening, considering someone else's feelings, and showing up with consistency. It's the little things—tone, timing, and treating people as equals.

146. When do you feel most aligned with your values?

When I say no to things that don't sit right with me, even when it's hard. Also, when I speak up for others or stand firm on what I believe in.

147. What are your thoughts on vulnerability—strength or weakness?

Absolute strength. It takes guts to open up and be seen. I think vulnerability is what deepens every meaningful relationship.

148. What causes or issues matter most to you?

Mental health and education. I think everyone deserves a chance to heal and grow, and those two things can break cycles.

149. How do you respond to people who challenge your beliefs?

I actually like it—it makes me reflect. As long as it's respectful, I'm open to hearing other perspectives and maybe even evolving mine.

150. Do you believe people can truly change?

Yes, but only if they really want to. Change takes humility, pain, and effort—but I've seen it happen in others and in myself.

151. How do you maintain self-discipline when no one's watching?

I remind myself of my "why." I'm not perfect, but when I slip, I try to reset quickly. Self-discipline to me is like a muscle—it gets stronger the more I use it.

152. What's a non-negotiable value in your personal or romantic life?

Respect. If that's missing, nothing else matters. I need to feel like both of us are valued and heard.

153. Have you ever stood up for someone when it was risky to do so?

Yeah, and it wasn't easy—but it felt necessary. I'd rather risk tension than stay silent when someone's being treated unfairly.

154. How do you show compassion in everyday life?

By listening without trying to fix. By noticing when someone needs a hand or space. Small kindnesses can mean the world when someone's going through it.

155. What kind of leader would you be—more heart or logic?

Heart first, but backed by logic. I think empathy drives trust and connection, and logic keeps everything clear and consistent.

156. Do you value stability more or freedom?

That’s a tough one—I’d say a balance. I need stability to feel grounded, but I crave freedom to express myself and grow.

157. What’s something you’ll never compromise on?

My peace. If something consistently disturbs my peace or identity, I walk away—even if it hurts.

158. When have you felt most tested in life?

When I had to walk away from people I cared about for my own well-being. It taught me that love sometimes means letting go.

159. How do you stay grounded when life gets chaotic?

I unplug, breathe, journal, and remind myself what really matters. A quiet mind helps me hear myself again.

160. What's your view on commitment—in work, relationships, or life?

I think commitment is sacred. If I commit, I give it my all. I don't like half-hearted energy—I'm either in or I'm not.

161. Do you believe love is a choice or a feeling?

Both. The feeling pulls you in, but the choice is what keeps it going. Real love shows up even when the butterflies fade.

162. How do you rebuild trust when it’s been broken?

With honesty, time, and consistency. It’s not a switch—it’s a process. And both people have to want it.

163. What’s one moral line you won’t ever cross?

I won’t betray someone’s trust intentionally. Once that line is crossed, it changes everything.

164. When have your values evolved or shifted dramatically?

In my early 20s. I started questioning beliefs I inherited and building my own. That’s when I really started becoming my own person.

165. What’s a value you picked up from someone you admire?

Grace under pressure. Watching someone stay calm and kind when everything’s falling apart made me want to be that kind of strong.

166. How do you handle hypocrisy—in yourself or others?

I call it out, gently. We're all hypocrites sometimes, but growth starts with awareness and accountability.

167. Is there a belief you held in the past that you no longer agree with?

Yeah—I used to think vulnerability was a weakness. Now, I see it as one of the strongest traits someone can have.

168. How do you keep your ego in check?

By reminding myself I don't know everything. Life humbles you fast if you're not careful, so I try to stay curious instead of prideful.

169. Do you believe in karma or some form of universal justice?

I do. I think energy comes back around, even if it takes time. The universe has its way of balancing things out.

170. What makes someone “good” in your eyes?

Someone who acts with empathy, treats others well, and lives by their values—even when no one’s watching.

171. What does self-respect mean to you?

It means not tolerating disrespect, setting healthy boundaries, and speaking kindly to yourself—especially when no one else does.

172. How do you practice gratitude in your everyday life?

By taking time to notice the little things. Whether it's a quiet morning or a kind message, I try to pause and really feel thankful.

FLIRTY/SEX QUESTIONS

This one doesn't need any explanation,these questions can make them more 100x interested in the conversation because everybody loves to talk about sex stuff

217: Do you like it when I make the first move?

Yeah, I actually love it when a woman takes the lead sometimes. It feels bold, confident, and honestly, a little irresistible. It tells me you know what you want—and that's a turn-on in itself.

218: Do you like being teased, or are you more about getting straight to the action?

A good tease drives me crazy—in the best way. That slow build-up, the tension, the anticipation—it makes everything feel more intense when it finally happens.

219: What's your favorite way to initiate intimacy?

I usually like to start with touch—gentle, playful, almost like testing the waters. Maybe a massage, or pulling you close while we're lying down. Eye contact and soft kisses usually follow right after.

220: What's the sexiest thing someone's ever said to you?

One time, someone whispered exactly what they wanted to do to me in vivid detail—right in my ear, while we were still in public. I swear I almost lost it. That mix of subtle and dirty? That was fire.

221: How do you like to be touched when things start heating up?

Slow and purposeful—fingers through my hair, hands on my neck or chest, that kind of thing. I like feeling like every touch is intentional and building toward something.

222: Have you ever had sex somewhere risky or public?

Yeah… once in a parked car during a storm. It was exciting, kind of reckless, but the thrill made it unforgettable.

223: Do you like taking your time in bed or keeping it spontaneous and wild?

Both, honestly. There’s something amazing about slow, passionate nights—but those unexpected, intense moments when we can’t keep our hands off each other? I live for that too.

224: What’s one outfit or look that instantly gets your attention?

Lingerie, for sure. Especially when it’s paired with confidence. But I also think there’s something incredibly sexy about an oversized t-shirt and bare legs—it’s the contrast that gets me.

225: What kind of dirty talk turns you on the most?

I like when it’s personal and raw—when you’re telling me exactly how you feel in the moment. Compliments, a bit of dominance, and some whispered desires? That combination always gets to me.

226: Do you like sex to be more dominant, submissive, or a mix?

Definitely a mix. I lean dominant most times, but I love when there's mutual control—when we both take turns leading, teasing, and pushing each other's buttons.

227: What's one thing you wish partners did more in bed?

Honestly? Slowing down and just being present. Rushing kills the vibe. Taking time to explore, connect, and feel each other deeply always makes it better.

228: How important is aftercare or cuddling for you after sex?

Very. That post-sex connection—the cuddling, the soft talk, the skin-to-skin—it's just as intimate as the act itself. It makes it feel meaningful.

229: Have you ever explored fantasies with a partner?

Yeah, I have. When there’s trust, exploring fantasies becomes a powerful way to bond. It makes everything feel open, honest, and fun.

230: Do you enjoy watching your partner undress, or do you prefer tearing their clothes off?

There’s something so hypnotic about watching a slow strip—when it’s deliberate and sensual. But I’ve had moments where I couldn’t wait, and yeah, tearing clothes definitely had its time too.

231: Are you into roleplay or any type of scenario-based sex?

I'm open to it, yeah. It adds a creative layer that keeps things fresh. Whether it's subtle or full-on, if we're both into it, I'm down.

232: Have you ever had a dream about someone you were attracted to?

Plenty of times. And sometimes, those dreams felt so real I woke up still feeling the heat. Crazy how our minds work like that.

233: What’s something subtle a partner has done that completely turned you on?

A simple whisper of my name with a certain tone, or brushing her fingers just under my shirt like it was accidental. Those little, quiet moments hit hard.

234: How important is kissing during sex for you?

Very. Kissing sets the tone—it keeps things emotional and connected. Passionate kissing during sex just takes everything to a deeper level for me.

235: Would you rather have a wild, intense quickie or a slow, drawn-out night?

Depends on the mood, but I lean toward slow and intense. I like building that tension, taking our time, and really losing ourselves in it.

236: What's the longest foreplay session you've ever had, and how was it?

It lasted almost an hour—we didn't even rush into anything. Just kissing, touching, teasing. It made everything that came after feel ten times more explosive.

237: Do you like dirty pictures, or are you more into suggestive flirting?

Suggestive flirting all day. A cheeky message, a glimpse of something without giving it all away—that gets me going way more than just a straight-up nude.

238: What kind of touch drives you crazy in the best way?

Fingertips down my back, soft kisses along my neck, a slow hand moving just under the waistband. It’s the anticipation that makes it electric.

239: Do you enjoy mirror sex or watching your partner's reactions?

Yes, both. Watching reactions—seeing how I'm affecting you—is incredibly sexy. And mirrors add a whole new visual layer to the experience.

240: What's one thing you think every good lover should know?

That connection and attentiveness matter more than technique. If you're really tuned into your partner, everything else flows naturally.

241: How do you feel about exploring boundaries or trying new things with a trusted partner?

I'm very open to it. If we trust each other, I'm all for trying new things—especially if it deepens our bond or unlocks new experiences together.

242: What's the best kind of foreplay for you—physical, mental, or both?

Both. Mental gets things started way before we even touch—little messages, teasing conversations. But physical foreplay, when it finally happens, just takes it to another level.

243: What kind of lingerie or look would you love to see me in?

Something soft but seductive—like black lace, maybe with a sheer robe. But honestly, it's your confidence in it that turns me on the most.

244: Do you prefer spontaneous sex or planned, romantic setups?

Spontaneous sex has that wild excitement, but I really enjoy planned moments too—when you know it's coming, and the build-up throughout the day is just too good to handle.

245: How do you feel about being blindfolded or restrained during sex?

I've tried both and I really liked the intensity. Not being able to see or move freely heightens all the other senses. It makes every touch feel more powerful.

246: Do you like giving massages as foreplay?

Absolutely. It's such a sensual way to connect. It relaxes both of us, and there's something intimate about letting my hands explore you slowly.

247: Have you ever fantasized about someone you weren't supposed to?

Yeah, once or twice. Sometimes attraction catches you off guard, even if you'd never act on it. The mind plays its own games.

248: What's one thing a partner did in bed that totally surprised you (in a good way)?

She took control completely—pushed me down, told me not to move. It was unexpected, and incredibly hot because it showed a side of her I hadn't seen before.

249: Do you like sex more when there's a deep emotional connection, or can it be just physical sometimes?

There's nothing like sex with emotional depth—it's a whole other level. Physical is fun, sure, but when there's love and trust involved? That's unforgettable.

250: Have you ever had a moment during sex where time felt like it stopped?

Yes, and I'll never forget it. It was slow, intense, and we were locked in this deep eye contact. Everything around us just faded. It felt like we were the only two people in the world

ROMANTIC & INTIMATE CONNECTION (Answers 251–275)

251: What makes you feel the most emotionally connected to someone?

When we're completely open—sharing our fears, dreams, random thoughts without filters. That kind of emotional nakedness, where you know the other person truly sees you, builds a connection nothing else can match.

252: How do you know when you're truly falling for someone?

I start thinking about them constantly—not just in a lustful way, but wondering if they've eaten, what kind of day they're having, or how they'd react to something funny I saw. They just become part of my mental world.

253: What does emotional intimacy mean to you?

It’s when you feel completely safe to be your raw, unfiltered self—and they not only accept it but love you even more for it. It’s more than just talking, it’s feeling understood without needing to explain too much.

254: Do you feel comfortable being vulnerable in a relationship?

Yes, though it took me a while to get there. Vulnerability is scary but powerful. It means I trust you enough to show you the parts of me I usually keep guarded.

255: What’s something you’ve never told a partner but wish you had?

That I sometimes struggle with showing affection if I’m overwhelmed emotionally. It’s not that I don’t care—it’s just me retreating into my head. I wish I had explained that better in past relationships.

256: How important is non-sexual touch for you in a relationship?

Very. Little things like holding hands, cuddling, brushing your hand against mine—it keeps the emotional connection alive in everyday moments, not just in the bedroom.

257: What kind of emotional support do you need from a partner?

Someone who listens without rushing to fix things. Just being there, present and patient, means more than any advice. I need someone who reminds me I don't have to carry everything alone.

258: What does love look like to you in day-to-day life?

It's in the details—bringing me coffee without asking, checking in after a long day, sending a random meme that made you think of me. Real love shows up consistently in small, meaningful ways.

259: Do you believe love can grow over time, or does it hit instantly?

Both, actually. Sometimes there's a spark, but it's the slow burn—the gradual deepening of trust and care—that creates the kind of love that lasts.

260: How do you usually express love when words don't feel enough?

Through actions. I'll cook for you, run errands for you, stay up late when you're upset. If I love you, I show it by being there in every way I can.

261: What's something small a partner has done that made you feel deeply loved?

One time, she kept a note I had written months ago and tucked it in her journal. Seeing that made me feel seen and cherished in a way I can't explain.

262: Do you like talking about the future with your partner?

Yeah, I do. Even if we're just daydreaming, it makes me feel like we're building something. Planning little trips, imagining our home together—it makes love feel real.

263: How do you rebuild intimacy after a conflict?

By reconnecting gently—first emotionally, then physically. I like to talk it through, hug it out, and remind each other that no matter what, we're still a team.

264: What scares you most about falling deeply in love?

Losing myself in someone else, or loving them more than they love me. Deep love is beautiful, but it also makes you vulnerable in a way nothing else does.

265: What makes you feel most desired on an emotional level?

When someone truly wants to understand me—my moods, my habits, even the things I struggle with. That kind of emotional curiosity and care makes me feel deeply wanted.

266: How do you like to emotionally recharge with your partner?

Quiet time together—just laying next to each other, talking about life, or even doing nothing. Sometimes recharging means just being near each other with no pressure to perform.

267: Have you ever cried in front of someone you loved?

Yeah, and it was one of the most vulnerable and bonding moments. It felt raw, but afterward, I felt closer to her than ever. It reminded me love can be a safe space.

268: What’s a romantic gesture that completely melts your heart?

Handwritten notes—especially when they come out of nowhere. There's something deeply romantic about someone putting their feelings on paper just for you.

269: How do you respond when your partner is going through something tough?

I become hyper-supportive. I check in, offer to help in any way I can, and try to be a calm, steady presence—just letting them know I'm not going anywhere.

270: How do you know when you truly trust someone?

When I don’t feel the need to hide or second-guess what I say. If I can let my guard down completely, even in my worst moments, that’s when I know I trust them fully.

271: What’s something about emotional connection that turns you on?

When we’re so emotionally synced that just looking at each other sparks something. Emotional attraction makes physical intimacy so much more powerful—it adds meaning to every touch.

272: Do you think it’s important to talk about love languages with your partner?

Absolutely. It’s how we learn to love each other the way we need to be loved—not just how we know how to love. That awareness makes all the difference.

273: What’s one thing you want your partner to always feel when they’re with you?

Safe. Not just physically, but emotionally and mentally. Like they can be their truest self with me and know they’ll be accepted, loved, and held close.

274: What kind of emotional intimacy do you crave the most?

I crave feeling like someone truly sees all of me—the good, the bad, the unspoken—and still chooses me every single day. That kind of closeness is rare and powerful.

275: Have you ever experienced a moment with someone where words weren't needed?

Yes, once we just laid there in silence, holding each other, and it felt like a whole conversation was happening through touch and breath. It was peaceful, intimate, and unforgettable.

STEP 3 : BUILD TRUST/FALL IN LOVE

So after all these questions to get the person to trust you .....now you will tell the person that you like him/her and you want to enter a relationship....

That you have been in a relationship all your life and you feel a special bond and connection with the person and you would love to be in w relationship with him or her ...

If he or she agrees....now you can start calling them sweet names like my love,darling,sweetheart and all that....and I will share you guys a second format for sweet love messages that you can be sending the person every morning and night to build more love and trust ....

And the conversation will be flowing normally as it goes but the only difference is that you guys will be falling each other sweet names and telling them how much you love and trust them.....

You have been in a relationship before and you know how relationships stuffs work so do it like that....use your sense ..🤔🧠

Don't wait for everything to be explained for you...

After building enough trust and love...then you use the billing method I will give you to tell them what do I do

PS: You can't build love or trust under 1 day,

You can't build love or trust under 1 week

It takes at least 3 weeks or more for someone to take you love you and trust you before any billing you give them will work....

If they don't trust you...e no go work ooo....

Tab 2
